The Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFAP)

The Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFAP) is a federal program that provides food assistance to low-income individuals and families who are experiencing financial hardship. TEFAP is administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and is funded through a combination of federal and state funds.

The program provides food assistance to eligible individuals and families through a network of state and local agencies. Participants in the program are eligible for food assistance if they meet certain income and asset eligibility criteria. TEFAP participants receive food directly from the program or through a food bank or other distribution network.

The program also includes a national network of food banks and other organizations that provide emergency food assistance to individuals and families who are experiencing financial hardship. The national network of food banks is funded through a combination of federal and state funds.

The program is administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and is funded through a combination of federal and state funds. Information about the program and eligibility criteria can be found on the USDA website.
